Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the first paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor of carrying out his invention.

Claims 1-85 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, first paragraph, as containing subject matter which was not described in the specification in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and/or use the invention. The specification failed to adequately disclose how the upper portion of the towers could be "flexible". It was not clear what kind of material of the upper portions are made of, and how are they "flexible" relative to the middle or lower portions of the entire towers. It is noted that the lower portions of the towers appear to contain propelling means (421) and it was not clear how the flexibility of the upper portions effect the lower portions, the cables, and the carriers. The specification merely stated that the upper portion as being "flexible" without further description. Accordingly, the specification as originally filed failed to adequately disclose the upper portion of the towers in such a way as to enable one skilled in the art to which it pertains to made and/or use the invention.

In light of the above rejection, no meaningful prior art can be applied against the claimed invention.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. The enclosed references are cited for interest.
